RESEARCH ETHICS: USE OF AI IN RESEARCH WRITING

Dr. Ch. Peidu

Academic Coordinator (Research),
CEC, New Delhi

riting is an art and skill which requires a good understanding of the subject and practice. Writing research papers is an all the more challenging task because of its idiosyncrasies and specifics inherent to the subject concerned. Among the various criteria used to assess research, writing prowess is a significant factor, alongside considerations like methodology, data analysis, and presentation. The quality of a paper, whether well-written or not, holds the power to enhance or tarnish the reputation of a researcher. In essence, a scientific paper serves as a reflective surface, mirroring the capabilities and expertise of its author. The success of a researcher is, to a large extent, gauged through their ability to articulate ideas in writing.

In recent times there has been growing concern and discussion about the use of AI in writing scientific papers. Much of it revolves around the use of ChatGPT (generative pre-trained transformers) that can perform a variety of natural language processing (NLP) tasks such as OpenAI's ChatGPT, Google's Bard, Microsoft Bing's Chat, etc. Arguably AI tools have been used to aid in writing such as Grammarly, or to help in the review and detection of plagiarism such as Turnitin, Urkund, etc. What makes GPT stand out from other AI tools is its ability to analyse the question or prompt and engage and respond to its users in a dialogic manner based on the information gleaned from the internet. Moreover, ChatGPT possesses the unique ability to undergo reinforcement learning, refining its content based on user feedback and delivering improved accuracy. The year 2023 witnessed a notable development with a handful of articles co-authored by ChatGPT, causing a stir in academic circles. This marked a significant stride in the assimilation of AI into the realm of academic writing, showcasing the potential for collaboration between human researchers and advanced language models. In this article, we outline some benefits and risks of using AI in academic writing.

BENEFIT

Effective Writing Tool

A GPT such as Bard and ChatGPT are valuable to understanding language in general, especially for non-native speakers in academic writing such as grammar, fluency, vocabulary, contextualizing, etc.

Writer's Block Breaker

By providing a simple hint GPT, can provide prompts and suggestions to overcome writer's block and get the writing process started.

Enhanced Efficiency and Productivity

GPT can generate content in a few seconds what human takes to write in a day after several days of reading.

Access to Research

Some GPT models have language translation capabilities, aiding researchers who work in multilingual environments.

Contextual Understanding

GPT models excel in contextual understanding, allowing them to provide contextually appropriate suggestions

Collaborative Writing

GPT can facilitate collaboration by generating shared notes, summarizing discussions, and suggesting different perspectives or argument lines.

Potential for Innovation and Creativity

GPT can generate different writing styles and formats, allowing researchers to experiment and find new ways to communicate their findings. It can analyze data and text from multiple sources, potentially revealing hidden patterns and connections that humans might miss

RISK

Overreliance and Skill Erosion

Being dependent on GPT could hinder the development of the essential analytical and critical thinking skills non-native speakers need to become strong academic writers in their own right.

Lack of Critical Thinking and Originality

GPT is a trained machine; it has nothing of its own. This can lead to inaccurate translations or misleading suggestions, requiring careful evaluation and critical thinking.

Susceptibility to Bias and Error

Content generated by GPT may contain biases and factual errors that can compromise accuracy and objectivity.

Limited Control Over Output

While users can provide prompts and feedback, the model's responses might still deviate from objectivity.

Plagiarism Concerns

AI-generated text can be remarkably similar to existing sources, blurring the lines between originality and plagiarism.

Inability to Verify Sources

GPT models generate text based on patterns learned from various sources based on the internet. They can't verify the credibility or reliability of these sources.

Ethical Concerns

The use of AI, including GPT, raises ethical concerns in academic writing. Issues such as authorship attribution, transparency in AI assistance, and the potential for unethical use (e.g., automated plagiarism) need careful consideration.

The application of AI in writing has come sooner than expected. The use of AI in academic writing is still in its early stages, and its future trajectory is uncertain but its potential is enormous and certain. It is clear that AI will continue to play an increasingly significant role in the academic landscape as has been evident in recent times wherein ChatGPT has been attributed as a co-author. While GPT models offer valuable support in generating text, their application in academic writing requires careful consideration of these limitations. Researchers and writers using GPT should approach its outputs with a critical eye, verify information independently, and be aware of potential challenges associated with bias, accuracy, and contextual understanding. Regardless of how AI shapes academic writing, one thing is certain: the human role of critical thinking, creativity, and ethical responsibility will remain paramount in navigating the evolving landscape of knowledge creation and communication. Striking a balance between technological innovations and preserving the integrity of scholarly communication will be essential for a positive future in the age of AI.

ducation in the digital era has arisen as a transformative force in the fast-developing environment of the 21st century, hence reinventing the techniques through which we study and gain information. A fresh approach to learning and gaining knowledge is brought about as a result of this. Particularly in a culture that is marked by continual change and growth, the inclusion of technology into educational settings has developed from being a fad to being an important requirement. This is especially true in the context of the information age. This should be kept in mind at all times, especially while talking about social media. The objective of this note is to research the relevance and examine the significance of digital education in the contemporary world as well as to delve deeply into the potential developments that we may expect in the distant future.

Current Landscape of Digital Education:

In the context of education, the phrase "digital education" refers to a broad variety of teaching techniques and technology breakthroughs that make it viable for students to absorb information outside of the typical setting of a classroom. The proliferation of mobile technology, including laptops, tablets, and smartphones, has made it feasible to access instructional content at any time and in any area where one may be. The availability of mobile devices in a broad variety of settings makes its realization feasible. As a consequence of the expansion of online courses, virtual classrooms, and interactive learning platforms, educational opportunities have become more accessible to a greater number of individuals. One of the factors that has contributed to the successful fulfilment of this task has been the reduction of hurdles that are dependent on geography. Another factor has been the provision of opportunities for learning that may be continued throughout an individual's whole life.

The COVID-19 outbreak, which compelled educational institutions to rapidly convert to online learning environments, has been a contributing factor in the acceleration of the adoption of digital education. Because of this, the acceptance of digital education has accelerated much farther than it had already been. It was as a direct consequence of the pandemic that the rate at which digital education was introduced picked up from its previous pace. The current crisis has not only brought to light the longevity and adaptability of digital education, but it has also brought to light the effectiveness of digital education in maintaining educational continuity in the face of fluctuations. The crisis brought to light both of these facts, which were previously hidden.

Advantages of Digital Education:

Accessibility: Digital education eliminates geographical constraints, enabling individuals from diverse backgrounds to access quality educational resources. This inclusivity is crucial for promoting equal opportunities and addressing educational disparities.

Personalization: Adaptive learning technologies tailor educational content to individual learning styles and pace. This personalized approach enhances comprehension and retention, catering to the unique need/s of each distinct learner.

Flexibility: Digital education provides flexibility in terms of scheduling and pace, accommodating the demands of learners with diverse schedules, including working professionals and individuals with family commitments.

Cost-Effectiveness: Online resources often reduce the financial burden associated with traditional education, offering a more affordable alternative for learners seeking education and skills enhancement.

What can we expect in the future?

Integration of Artificial Intelligence (AI): The future of digital education will likely see increased integration of AI, allowing for more intelligent and adaptive learning experiences. AI algorithms can analyse student performance data to provide personalised recommendations and feedback, fostering a more efficient learning process.

Virtual and Augmented Reality (VR/AR): As VR and AR technologies mature, they will play a more significant role in education. Immersive experiences can simulate real-world scenarios, providing hands-on learning opportunities in fields such as science, medicine, and engineering.

Blockchain for Credentialing: Blockchain technology has the potential to revolutionize credentialing and verification processes. Digital certificates and credentials stored on a secure blockchain can enhance the authenticity and portability of educational qualifications.

Global Collaboration and Networking: Digital education will further facilitate global collaboration among students and educators. Virtual classrooms and collaborative platforms will connect learners from different parts of the world, fostering cultural exchange and diverse perspectives.

In conclusion, because its influence extends well beyond the confines of conventional educational environments, it is difficult to argue against the reality that digital education is still relevant in today's society. In recent years, there has been a rise in the prevalence of digital education, which is the reason why this is the case. This is because technical improvements are still being produced, which means that the future of digital education is filled with intriguing possibilities. This indicates that the future of digital education is really exciting. It is projected that the educational environment will experience a shift as a consequence of the introduction of technologies such as blockchain technology, artificial intelligence (AI), virtual reality (VR), and augmented reality (AR), as well as increased worldwide cooperation. Through the implementation of these innovations, students will have access to options for growth and development that have never been considered before. If we are going to successfully navigate the ever-evolving frontier of digital education, it will be essential for people, educational institutions, and politicians alike to identify the changes that are occurring and to adapt to them for a brighter future.

About the Expert

Dr. Niti Bhutani is an Associate Professor in the Department of Economics at Hindu College, University of Delhi. She received her Master's from the Delhi School of Economics and her Ph.D. from the University of Maryland at College Park, USA. She has several articles and policy documents to her credit and has presented her work at various academic conferences and invited talks. Her current lecture series titled "Mathematical Methods for Economics" recorded by the Consortium of Educational Communication is based on the same course that she teaches at Delhi University.

Excerpt from the Lecture

Exponential functions constitute a very useful class of functions that have a whole range of practical applications. These functions often underlie discussions on topics like economic growth, population growth, accumulation of interest, radioactive decay, the spread of infectious diseases, and so on. A quantity is said to increase (or decrease) exponentially if it increases (or decreases) by a fixed factor per unit of time. This is as opposed to a linear relationship where a quantity increases (or decreases) by the same amount per unit of time. The concepts are illustrated through examples in the lecture.

The mathematical formulation of an exponential function is used to illustrate the concepts of a fixed factor, initial value, and when the function is strictly increasing/ decreasing. A discussion of the corresponding graphs is also provided. Moreover, the concept of doubling time is introduced in terms of the amount of time it takes for a quantity to double.

The lecture uses the idea of an exponential function to introduce the student to the world of finance starting from first principles. In particular, the lecture explains the distinction between the principles of simple interest and compound

Learning Objectives

The lecture aims at enabling the student to understand:

- what it means for a quantity to increase or decrease exponentially
- the difference between an exponential function and a power function
- the mathematical formulation of an exponential function
- the difference between the principle of simple interest and compound interest
- the concept of doubling time
- the seven-ten rule in finance
