

SUMMARY

This lecture deals further with the introduction to vernacular architecture. The influences that lead to the evolution of any particular vernacular built form. Also discussed are the various derivatives of vernacular architecture. To understand vernacular architecture it is also important to study its components which are also discussed in this lecture. Furthermore the process of how a vernacular language of architecture can be documented and studied is also discussed. To conclude we talk about how vernacular architecture is a response to cultural and contextual aspects.