

SUMMARY

In this lecture we deal with the various approaches to studying any vernacular architecture or built form. Aesthetic, archeological and behavioral approaches are few methods to name. The features of the various methods of approach have been discussed in detail. One gets closer to the evolution of vernacular architecture as we move from one approach to another and understand its implications and what we are able to extract from them as lessons.