

SUMMARY

The most important factors for a good teacher are his personal qualities, his educational qualifications, his professional skills and the place that he occupies in the community. Great teachers are the one who inspire their learners to achieve not just in tests and examinations, but also in life. In ancient India, the Guru occupied a very respectable place in society and he played a great role in molding the future of a country. He was a person with humility and compassion who devoted his life to the course of teaching in the missionary spirit of self-sacrifice. In the 21st century, theories and findings of great educationists and psychologists have dramatically changed the role of teachers and the concept of Constructive Approach of Teaching has gained momentum. Constructivist learning is a student-driven process in which learners develop or construct their understanding of concepts by incorporating their own outside experiences and perspectives as well as those of other students rather than only receiving information from their instructor. Teachers should be equipped well to guide the future generation in this fast changing society. The moral aspects in the present education are absolutely ignored today. It may not be possible to completely lead a life full of control, but we should try to adapt to a way of living with ethical values.