

Summary

From this chapter we can summarize that, the capacity and will of an individual to rally men and women to a common purpose” is leadership. Leadership is the act of influencing others people to cooperate toward some common goals which they come to find desirable. This act is performed by a very few in a society. Leadership is a dynamic process that caters to the needs of the members of the group. Further, it emerges in the interaction of individuals with one another. Without right leadership, no home, community, organisation, discipline, institution, profession and finally not any nation can move on the path of progress.