

OBJECTIVE

Steam is defined as vapour form of water. Steam is generated using a steam generator or boiler. Water is heated in an enclosed vessel and converted into vapour. The steam generated in a boiler is called as saturated steam. Steam is one of the most essential utility in food processing and has wide applications as a source of heat. Steam can be classified into three forms namely, wet steam, dry steam and super heated steam.